IS LEGALIZATION THE ANSWER?

The U.S. has been losing the war on drugs for decades, so maybe it's time to shift course and actually consider legalizing drugs, says an expert on the topic. 4

5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO PHILLY

NIKKI M. MASCALL, REPORTER

The U.S. has been battling — and losing — the war on drugs since the Nixon administration. As our current opioid epidemic claims an estimated 130 lives daily, some wonder if legalizing all drugs is a solution. Portugal did, in 2001, and saw a drastic drop in ODs, drug-related crimes and incarcerations. I reached out to Jim Peake of addiction-rep.com to weigh in on whether or not decriminalization is a viable solution for us. Turn to page 4 or metro.us to read what he had to say.

1 POLL: 4 IN 10 BELIEVE KAVANAUGH ALLEGATIONS

Four in 10 Americans believe sexual misconduct allegations against U.S. Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh, while three in 10 do not and the rest do not know, according to a Reuters/Ipsos poll that split largely along party lines. The poll, released on Sunday, follows an emotionally charged week in Washington, during which Kavanaugh's once-certain confirmation was jeopardized after three women made allegations against him, including accusations of assault and exposing himself in public in the 1980s. The FBI has opened an investigation after Trump bowed to pressure from moderate Senate Republicans. The poll found that 42 percent of adults said they believed the accusations, including about the same number of men and women. Thirty-one percent do not believe them and 27 percent said they "don't know" what to believe. The responses were divided largely along partisan lines — about two-thirds of Democrats said they believed the allegations and nearly two-thirds of Republicans said they did not.

2 SON OF US MARINE ELECTED OKINAWA GOVERNOR

Danny Tamaki, the son of a U.S. Marine and Japanese mother, was elected governor of Japan's Okinawa island on Sunday on an anti-U.S. military presence platform, defeating a candidate backed by Prime Minister Shinzo Abe's ruling bloc, domestic media reported. Tamaki defeated Atsushi Sakima, who ran with the support of Abe's Liberal Democratic Party and its junior coalition partner, NHK and Kyodo news agency said. Public broadcaster NHK showed a jubilant Tamaki and his supporters cheering and dancing after news of his victory. A former radio personality who went into local politics and was elected to parliament in 2009, Tamaki, 58, opposes the planned relocation of the U.S. Marines' Futenma air base within Okinawa. His stance is the same as his predecessor, Takeshi Onaga, who died of pancreatic cancer last month while in office. Tokyo's central government and Okinawa authorities have long been at loggerheads over the plan to move the air base. A U.S.-Japan agreement calls for moving the base, which is surrounded by schools, hospitals and shops, to a less populated area, called Henoko.

3 PHILADELPHIA PUERTO RICAN PARADE

On Sunday, thousands gathered along the Ben Franklin Parkway to marvel at the colorful sights and sounds of the 56th annual Puerto Rican Day Parade. The parade was hosted by the Council of Spanish Speaking Organizations of Philadelphia (Concilio) and featured various performances of traditional Latino music and dance. This year's theme was "Renacer de Puerto Rico" or "The Rebirth of Puerto Rico," in honor of the U.S. territory's resilience after Hurricane Maria in 2017. Participating performers showed off their cultural pride and interpretations to the year's theme of rebirth. A moment of silence hung over the parkway as a casket was carried to honor those who passed away from the storm to start the parade. But the spirit of Puerto Rican resilience was celebrated through many dance performances and the crowd's loud cheers, Puerto Rican attire, and flag-waving. See more on page 10.

4 KIM JONG UN SENDS 2 DOGS ACROSS DMZ TO S. KOREA

North Korean leader Kim Jong Un has sent South Korean President Moon Jae-in a pair of white North Korean Pungsan dogs as a gift, the latest sign of a dramatic thaw in relations between the Korean rivals. Moon and Kim held their third meeting this year in the North Korean capital of Pyongyang in mid-September, when Kim proposed the idea of the canine presents, the South Korean presidential Blue House said in a statement on Sunday. The dogs passed through the heavily fortified demilitarized zone (DMZ) and the truce village of Panmunjom into South Korea on Thursday. Kim crossed at the same place to meet Moon for the first time in April this year. The breed, named after a North Korean county, is known for its loyalty and skills for hunting, even tigers. It is designated as a North Korean "natural monument" animal. The two will live with South Korea's First Dog, Tori, who became the first shelter dog to take up residence at the South Korean presidential compound. Moon, who is known to be an animal lover, adopted the black mixed-breed Tori in July last year, two months after he took office.

5 MOLINARI CLINCHES RYDER CUP GLORY FOR EUROPE

Italian Francesco Molinari fittingly took the glory as Europe regained the Ryder Cup from the United States in dominant style on Sunday, but it was a complete team effort that delivered what turned out to be a crushing 17.5-10.5 victory. With Molinari safely on the 16th green, Phil Mickelson conceded their singles match after firing his tee shot into the water, taking Europe to the magical 14.5 mark they needed to win the Cup for the fourth time in the last five. It completed a magical year for Molinari, the British Open champion, who became the first European to win all five matches in a week — having not won any of his previous six. Europe were effectively assured of victory when the Italian teed off as he, Henrik Stenson and Sergio Garcia were all dormie and guaranteed at least half a point — with Europe needing just one more. All three went on to secure wins and Swedish rookie Alex Noren completed the day's action in style when he sunk a 40-foot putt to beat Bryson Dechambeau on the last and complete a 7.5-4.5 singles victory for Europe.

5 Tips to Remember to Avoid Being a Victim of Medical Malpractice

1. Read and Understand for Yourself - Whenever you're given a new prescription or results of a medical test, read all you can about it, then ask whatever questions you have. Don't be embarrassed to ask questions. Be an advocate for yourself!

2. Get a Second Opinion about your Upcoming Procedure before it Occurs - Before any non-emergency medical procedure, it is a good idea to get a second opinion. Getting a second opinion is not a matter of not trusting your doctor, it is a matter of being an educated patient.

3. Bring a Loved One or Friend - When undergoing a serious medical procedure, bring a loved one or friend who can be your "eyes" and "ears" and help you think through important decisions. Having a second pair of eyes and ears may help keep you out of harm's way.

4. Get the Best Care Possible - Perhaps the most effective way to avoid medical error is to avoid substandard physicians. The best way to prevent this is to research potential doctors before committing. If you ask the right questions and perform the right research, you will be well on your way to finding the right doctor and reducing your chances of being a victim of medical malpractice.

5. Contact Fodera & Long, P.C. - If you believe that you or a loved one have been a victim of medical malpractice, contact the experienced lawyers at Fodera & Long, P.C. at (215) 569-1212 or www.foderalawfirm.com.

Can we end the opioid epidemic by legalizing all drugs?

Addiction treatment industry expert Jim Peake raises questions as to whether the decades-old war on drugs is working.

NIKKI M. MASCALI
nikki.mascali@metro.us

The 130 people who are estimated to die each day from an opioid-related drug overdose serve as a stark reminder that the nation is gripped by an opioid epidemic. In fact, the federal Health and Human Services last year declared it a national public health emergency.

To combat the opioid epidemic, the HHS created a five-point strategy that includes better addiction prevention, treatment and recovery services; better data; better pain management and targeting of overdose-reversing drugs; and better research.

One strategy HHS did not suggest, which some countries have employed, is the legalization of all drugs. Since doing it in 2001, Portugal, for example, has seen a drastic drop in overdoses, drug-related crimes, incarcerations and more.

But can such decriminalization help the U.S. end its own epidemic?

"I think the question we have to ask is if what we've been doing since the Nixon administration, the war on drugs, is it working?" said Jim Peake, president of addictionrep.com. "Some will say yes, some no. I personally would say no, so if something's not working, you have to change it or cut it, try something different."

Peake, however, isn't in favor of a complete rollout should full legalization become an approach the U.S. takes. Instead, he suggests piloting it in states that have been hit hard by the opioid epidemic.

"I think we have to look to see if there are places out there that are having success by legalizing," he said. "If you look at Portugal, fewer people are on drugs, more are in treatment and less people are dying. I think that if we are open to growing and learning, we have to look at some other alternatives because too many people are affected by this, too many families are absolutely destroyed."

An actual solution to the opioid epidemic is likely something we won't see in the U.S. anytime soon, if ever. On the frontlines of fighting the crisis are more than 14,000 substance-abuse facilities across the country, but how do you choose which one should treat you or your loved one?

"One of the first things to do is ask if the place you're calling is an actual rehab," Peake said. "Ask what type of license they have, and look it up. Each state is going to be different. Make sure you're talking to a treatment center and not a call center or third party."

Other tips he suggests:

- Ask how much one-on-one time a patient will have with a counselor.
- Connect with the person(s) actually providing the care, "not just the marketing guy."
- Decide which treatment locale works best. "One [option] is to stay close to home to involve the family in the treatment, and the other is to go out of town and change people, places and things," Peake explained.
- Think beyond 30 days. "Doing a 30-day program in any place and expecting to be sober afterward probably isn't going to get you a very good result," Peake said.
- Look at reviews. "When you're looking at a rehab, type in the name of the rehab plus reviews," Peake said. "Every rehab is not going to have 100 percent. If they do, they're probably skewed."

Kavanaugh-Ford hearing inspires 200 percent sex assault hotline surge

Executive Director Gina Scaramella said the hearings and coverage can be retraumatizing to sexual harassment survivors.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

Sexual assault hotlines reported an increase in calls during last week's Brett Kavanaugh-Christine Blasey Ford hearings

RAINN, the Rape, Abuse and Incest National Network, saw "unprecedented wait times" for both its hotline and online chat on Thursday.

"The number of people helped by the National Sexual Assault Hotline was 201 percent above average yesterday," RAINN said on Twitter Friday morning.

During the Senate Judiciary Committee's Brett Kavanaugh vote on Friday, Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont said that the National Sexual Assault Hotline saw a 147 percent increase in calls on Thursday, during the Kavanaugh hearing. (The National Sexual Assault Hotline is operated by RAINN and routes callers to a local RAINN affiliate organization based on the first six digits of their phone number.)

Other sexual assault hotlines reported a flurry of activity on Thursday, as well, like BARCC, the Boston Area Rape Crisis Center.

"During and after major news events like this, we always see an increase in people reaching out for support," Gina Scaramella, BARCC executive director, told Metro in a statement on Friday. "This week, and especially yesterday and this morning, has been busier than average for our 24-7 hotline. By 11 a.m. this morning, we had already received as many calls as we usually get in a whole day."

"During and after major news events like this, we always see an increase in people reaching out for support."
Gina Scaramella, BARCC executive director

Though BARCC is headquartered in Boston, the organization says its sexual assault hotline is a resource for any sexual assault survivor around the country.

Sexual assault survivors have been sharing their own stories in droves since the #MeToo movement first gained steam, and that visibility has only increased throughout the Kavanaugh hearings. Before Dr. Ford's testimony, survivors shared their stories with the hashtag #WhyIDidntReport.

On Friday, in the wake of Dr. Ford's testimony, two women confronted Sen. Jeff Flake after he made it known that he would vote in favor of Kavanaugh.

"Don't look away from me. Look at me and tell me that it doesn't matter what happened to me. That you will let people like that go into the highest court of the land," said one of the women, who identified herself as a sexual assault survivor.

BARCC shared multiple videos on Facebook after Thursday's Kavanaugh hearing with messages to sexual assault survivors.

One video's message is displayed on handheld signs held by BARCC staffers: "Sexual assault is all over the media. It's great people are talking about it. It can also be intense and traumatic for survivors. Take care of yourself and others." The other video includes a flipbook of messages to survivors with notes like "I believe you," and "never let anyone tell you there is a right or wrong way to be a survivor."

"These hearings and the subsequent news coverage and conversations are often retraumatizing to survivors of sexual harassment and assault, and people are reaching out for support. Some of the people we've been talking with are reaching out with concerns and questions about reporting and fears about being asked about why they didn't report or why it may have taken so long to report," Scaramella said.

White House adviser Conway admits to being sex assault victim

Kellyanne Conway, an adviser to President Donald Trump, said on Sunday that she was the victim of sexual assault and that women who survive such experiences should be heard.

"I feel very empathetic, frankly, for victims of sexual assault and sexual harassment and rape," Conway told CNN while defending the Supreme Court nomination of Brett Kavanaugh, who has been accused of sexual assault by one woman and sexual misconduct by two other women.

"I'm a victim of sexual assault," Conway said. Conway and White House officials did not immediately respond to a request for comment from Reuters.

The court nomination has been upended by the allegations, and President Donald Trump was forced to order the FBI to look into them after several moderate Republicans, whose votes could be crucial for Kavanaugh's confirmation, called for a probe.

One Kavanaugh accuser, Christine Blasey Ford, detailed her allegation in testimony before a Senate panel on Thursday that Kavanaugh sexually assaulted her when the two were in high school in the 1980s. Appearing afterward before the committee, Kavanaugh repeated his categorical denial.

The swirling allegations have led other sexual assault victims to come forward to tell their stories.

Conway suggested on Sunday that the ire of many victims was improperly pointed at Republican supporters of Kavanaugh, as opposed to the perpetrators of the assaults.

"It's not a meeting of the #MeToo movement," she told CNN. "It's raw partisan politics."

For the past 12 months, women and men have shared stories of sexual harassment and abuse under the social media hashtag "#MeToo." In that time, the careers of a number of prominent men in entertainment, politics and finance have been toppled in the face of accusations of sexual misconduct. REUTERS

Boyd Gaming takes over the Valley Forge Casino Resort.

To hear Boyd Gaming Corporation VP of Communications David Strow tell it, his company's 25 gaming entertainment properties portfolio across eight states has not included an East Coast property in a minute — not since MGM Resorts International acquired Boyd's 50 percent interest in Borgata Hotel Casino & Spa in Atlantic City for approximately $900 million during the summer of 2016.

"Our strategy is built around creating a nationwide, geographically diverse portfolio across the United States, trying to establish a presence in as many different gaming markets as possible," said Strow, who has been with Boyd Gaming for 11 years. "Clearly, if you look at our holdings across the map, not only do we not have any assets in Pennsylvania, we haven't any assets on the East Coast. Our furthest assets East — after we divested the Borgata in 2016 — [were in] Biloxi, Mississippi, and Michigan City, Indiana."

Therefore, Valley Forge Casino Resort, just north of the King of Prussia Mall — all 40,000-square foot, 600 slot machines, 50 table games, 8 restaurants and bars, 100,000 square feet of meeting, convention and exhibit space, and 498 hotel rooms — is an exceptional purchase, one within an appealing demographic of new money-spending millennials and dug-in longtime families.

"That area is a very important market, with a strongly performing asset with some of the highest win-per-unit numbers of any casino in the area," he said. "It's one of the most high-trafficked locations in the Philadelphia area. That was very attractive."

"That area is a very important market. It's one of the most high-trafficked locations in the Philadelphia area. That was very attractive."
David Strow,
VP of communications,
Boyd Gaming Corp.

Keith Smith, President and CEO of Boyd Gaming said, in a statement, that "this is a moment of significant opportunity for Pennsylvania's gaming industry," in response to the new options available to all Pennsylvania casinos in regard to legislation passed in 2017 to expand slots.

Strow and Boyd Gaming are no strangers to sports betting, as they have been offering as much in Nevada for 40 years now. When it came to finding a sports betting outlet, Boyd had an eye toward the sort of brand equity the casino corporation holds in Las Vegas and beyond its city limits. "Our relationship to FanDuel is a national strategic partnership that is growing as the market grows," said Strow.

What is quickly ramping up for Boyd's $280.5 million acquisition — what the money will look like at Valley Forge Casino — is an immediate expansion of its slots, with 250 new machines and new carpeting on the casino floor.

Puerto Rican Day Parade brings thousands together in Philadelphia

The heart of Philly was filled with Puerto Rican pride, music and fun festivities at this year's annual parade.

SARAH LUOMA
letters@metro.us

Now in its 56th year, the annual Puerto Rican Day Parade filled downtown Philly with thousands of celebrating spectators on Sunday.

This year's theme was the "rebirth of Puerto Rico," a tribute to those who lost their lives to Hurricane Maria and those who are still trying to recover from the tragic events of last September.

Accompanying the theme, proud Puerto Ricans and Latinos displayed a large Puerto Rican flag during the march as a show of pride for their heritage.

"Red for the blood of our people, white for our unity," Philly resident Kimberly Lamberty said.

Lamberty, an advocate and keeper of the flag, held it high with others from her community as a message to President Donald Trump, who has been criticized by many who believe the president did very little to help Puerto Rico recover in the aftermath of the storm.

"We're not going to allow this man to minimize our role in this country, colonized citizens for 100 years now, and not look at the contributions we have [made]. Here, we push to shove."

Thousands watched as the parade, hosted annually by the Council of Spanish Speaking Organizations of Philadelphia (Concilio), kicked off festivities at noon on 16th Street and made its way up the Benjamin Franklin Parkway with large colorful floats, dancers, music, flags and more.

Following the parade, many attended the festivities on American Street and Lehigh Avenue with more entertainment, food and music.

Each year the event attracts roughly 1,500 participants and more than 5,000 attendees. Around 96,000 viewers tune in to watch the parade live on TV.

Botched party app lets UK public log in as cabinet ministers

British Prime Minister Theresa May's Conservative Party apologized on Saturday after releasing a phone app for the annual party conference that let members of the public log in as senior government ministers and view their personal details.

Dawn Foster, a columnist with the Guardian newspaper, discovered that a flaw in the app allowed users to log in as anyone attending the party conference, simply by entering an email address.

It meant the mobile phone numbers of all those attending the four-day event — journalists, party members and lawmakers, including senior government ministers — could be accessed. On Twitter, Foster showed how she had been able to log into the system as former foreign secretary Boris Johnson.

"It's let me login as Boris Johnson, and just straight up given me all the details used for his registration," she wrote. "I'm the most tech illiterate person alive, and I've done this, imagine there are plenty more security bugs."

The loophole in the app was closed after the security breach was pointed out to the party but not before the details of some politicians had been accessed and in some instances changed.

A journalist from the BuzzFeed website said at least two cabinet ministers had received prank calls from the public as a consequence.

"The technical issue has been resolved and the app is now functioning securely," a Conservative spokesman said. "We are investigating the issue further and apologize for any concern caused."

"The technical issue has been resolved. We are investigating the issue further and apologize for any concern caused."
Conservative spokesman

Last year, May's major conference speech descended into chaos after she suffered a coughing fit, a prankster gained access to the stage to hand her the form given to sacked employees, and some letters of her party's slogans dropped to the ground from a sign on the stage behind her as she spoke.

"I think people will see a really impressive conference all round this year," Conservative Party Chairman Brandon Lewis told Sky News before news of the security breach was revealed. REUTERS

SEC's focus on US corporate bosses pays off with Musk settlement

The Tesla head stepped down as chairman.

A high-profile settlement with Tesla Inc. Chief Executive Elon Musk exemplifies a recent push by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission to go after executives and not just their companies, securities law experts said.

In the last week, the SEC announced charges or penalties against eight corporate officials at six companies, including Tesla. The SEC pursued each on different grounds, but securities lawyers said they highlight a shift to an emphasis on personal wrongdoing that has accelerated under Jay Clayton, an appointee of President Donald Trump who has served as SEC chairman since May 2017.

"Clayton is focused on holding individuals liable and not just corporate entities," said Mary Hansen, co-chair of the white collar defense and corporate investigations practice at Drinker Biddle, who worked in the SEC's enforcement division for eight years.

"The public wants to see our law enforcement, whether it be civil or criminal, hold those individuals responsible. That's what is driving this focus on individual liability."

The SEC brought action last week against the former president and chief financial officer of LendingClub Asset Management, Renaud Laplanche and Carrie Dolan, and the former CEO and CFO of Walgreens Boots Alliance, Gregory Wasson and Wade Miquelon.

In Tesla's case, the SEC fined Musk $20 million and forced him to step down as chairman to settle charges he committed securities fraud in tweets saying he was considering taking the electric carmaker private. Tesla itself was also fined $20 million.

GETTY IMAGES

"Holding individuals accountable is important and an effective means of deterrence," Clayton, a former corporate lawyer at law firm Sullivan & Cromwell LLP, said in statement on Saturday. Some Democratic lawmakers had expressed concerns during Clayton's confirmation process that his ties to Wall Street would create conflicts and weaken oversight.

In 2016, 73 percent of the SEC's standalone actions involved charges against one or more individuals, according to its own data. That rose to 80 percent in the six months after Clayton took over.

The SEC's focus on personal culpability has roots in the aftermath of the 2007-2009 financial crisis. Few Wall Street executives were criminally prosecuted for their involvement, triggering calls by lawmakers and the media to hold more individuals accountable for corporate wrongdoing. REUTERS

Indonesia mourns 800 dead after earthquake, tsunami

The toll from an earthquake and tsunami in Indonesia soared to 832 confirmed dead on Sunday, with authorities fearing the numbers will climb as rescuers grappled to get aid to outlying communities cut off from communications and help.

Dozens of people were reported to be trapped in the rubble of several hotels and a mall in the city of Palu, on Sulawesi island, which was hit by waves as high as 20 feet following the 7.5 magnitude earthquake on Friday.

A woman was pulled alive from the debris of the city's Roa Roa Hotel, where up to 60 people were believed trapped. Hundreds of people gathered at the wrecked eight-story Tatura Mall to search for loved ones.

"Grieve for the people of Central Sulawesi, we all grieve together," President Joko Widodo tweeted late on Sunday.

GETTY IMAGES

Most of the confirmed deaths were in Palu itself, and authorities are bracing for the toll to climb as connections with outlying areas are restored.

Of particular concern is Donggala, a region of 300,000 people north of Palu and close to the epicenter of the quake, and two other districts, which have been cut off from communications since Friday.

"We haven't received reports from the three other areas. Communication is still down, power is still out. We don't know for sure what is the impact," Sutopo Purwo Nugroho, a spokesman for the National Disaster Mitigation Agency, told a news conference.

A video of the outskirts of Donggala shot on Sunday afternoon by the Indonesian Red Cross showed scenes of devastation, with houses flattened into piles of rubble and broken furniture.

Smaller aftershocks from Friday's quake continued to rumble through the area.

Five foreigners — three French, one South Korean and one Malaysian — were among the missing, Nugroho said. The 832 dead included people crushed in the quake and swept away by the tsunami.

Vice President Jusuf Kalla said the death toll could rise into the thousands. REUTERS

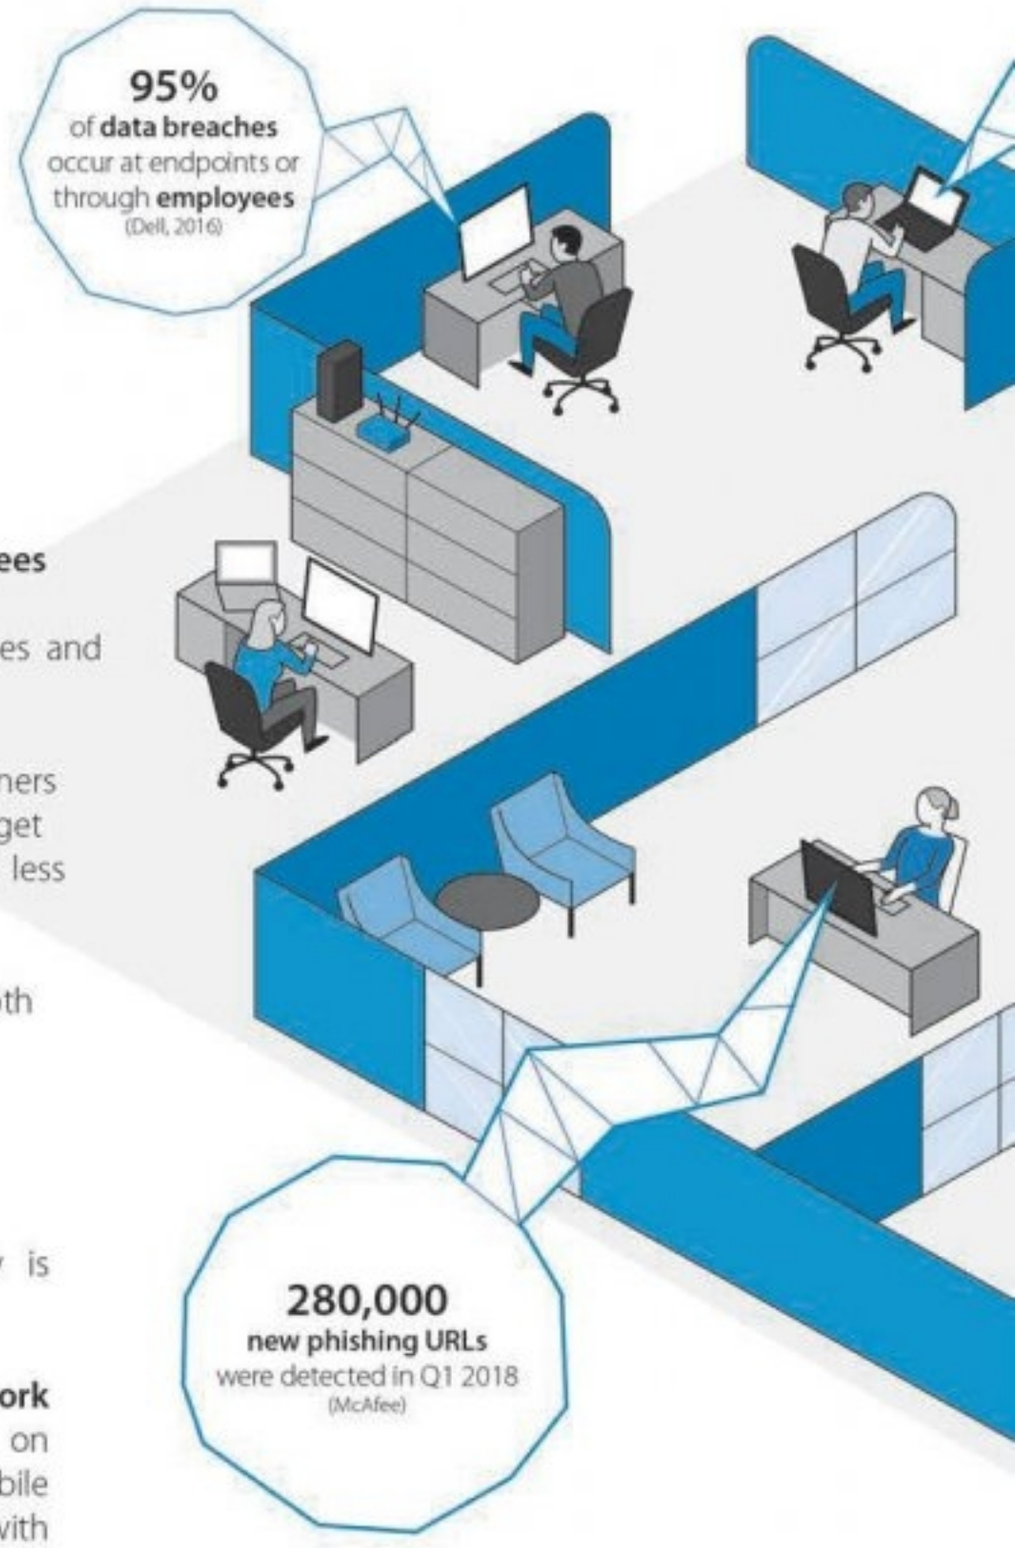
Defend, Detect and Repel

Part one of a three-part series on cybersecurity for small business



98.2% of all enterprises in the U.S. are small businesses with fewer than 100 employees
(U.S. Census Bureau, 2015)
They are thriving thanks to a new generation of networked devices, smart workspaces and new ways to innovate, collaborate and engage with customers.

However, those tools have exposed small businesses to new threats. While many owners think they are too small to be targeted by cybercriminals, they are in fact a top target because there are so many small businesses and their security measures tend to be less robust than large organizations.

Don't become a cybercrime statistic. Learn how you can protect your business both proactively and reactively, through a mix of technology and educated employees.

Secure access to shield your business from hackers

Building a shield of robust technology and smart people starts with knowing the threats you face and putting defenses in place that are oriented towards those threats.

Just as important as having the right defenses is ensuring they are used correctly – a lock only works on a door that is closed.

SECURITY MEASURE: Train your employees. Help them learn to spot fraudulent emails, not click on suspicious links or attachments, use secure passwords and change them frequently.
WHY IT'S IMPORTANT: Fraudulent emails are a common first step used to steal passwords or scam an employee. Many viruses come through email or unsafe web browsing. Weak passwords can be guessed in mere hours.

SECURITY MEASURE: Use email encryption. Install software to encode emails so that they can't be read if they are intercepted by a hacker.
WHY IT'S IMPORTANT: A great deal of sensitive business information is sent via email, making it a common target of attacks. Setting it up to encrypt automatically is critical.

SECURITY MEASURE: Protect network access and devices. Require logins on your Wi-Fi, network, computers and mobile devices. Use the latest laptops equipped with security-enhancing 8th gen Intel® Core™ i5 vPro™ processors and hardware login security like TPM 2.0 (Trusted Platform Module), fingerprint readers and facial recognition.
WHY IT'S IMPORTANT: Unprotected networks and devices offer many opportunities for hackers to get into your shared files and cause harm.

SECURITY MEASURE: Use robust anti-virus and firewall solutions. High-quality security solutions are affordable and effective at sniffing out attacks and helping repel them.
WHY IT'S IMPORTANT: Attackers change tactics often. Network security systems are best able to keep on top of the latest threats and give you time to react if an attack does get past first-line defenses.

Part 2: Tuesday, October 2

Shields up: Why and how to shield your small business from hackers.

Learn more about the serious risks of insecure endpoints and the best ways to improve security using technology and smart employee policies.

Part 3: Wednesday, October 3

Fighting back: How small businesses can detect, respond and recover from a cyberattack.

Taking proactive steps so that you can react quickly is essential for any cyberattack response plan. Learn what it takes to get your business back up and running fast.

Detect, repel and recover from attacks

Hackers are creative, tenacious and persistent. The sheer number of cyber attacks shows why small businesses need to be vigilant. Some attacks will get through. If it happens to your business you can still take action as long as you have planned and prepared.

PREPARE: Establish a cybersecurity incident plan. By having clearly laid out steps to follow, you eliminate panic and ensure a rapid response to attacks, with everyone working together.
WHAT'S INVOLVED: Make sure your employees are trained on what to do if an attack gets through – notifying an established (or pre-identified) security lead on your team and dealing with infected devices and files. Ensure the right people know where backups are kept and how to deploy them.

BACK EVERYTHING UP: Automatic backups can avert disaster. A reasonable investment in backup technology can ensure business continuity.
WHAT'S INVOLVED: Backups often involve software that automatically copies files on protected computers and copies it either to a separate data storage drive at your business or cloud storage, preferably both.

DETECT: Make network monitoring someone's job. On average, malicious software lives in a network for months before being detected, often because no one looked for it.
WHAT'S INVOLVED: Setting up and using anti-virus and firewall software. Businesses must also establish policies for reviewing reports, tracking down threats and removing them.

REPORT: Call in reinforcements and alert stakeholders. An attack isn't a time to improvise. Don't be afraid to ask for help fixing things and make sure customers or other stakeholders know.
WHAT'S INVOLVED: Transparency about attacks gets the right people involved to set things straight. You can also educate employees to watch for similar attacks, and your experience may help inform other businesses.

LEAVING THE SUBWAY IS LIKE ENTERING A "MOSH PIT"!
The daily grind of entering and exiting the subway has become more and more of a hassle. It's become somewhat of a "mosh pit." If we all adhered to the basic principle of walking to the right, the way we drive our cars, there would be less collisions on the sidewalks and pile ups on subway stairs. Isn't walking on the right side the implied rule? When I was In school we were taught to walk on the right side of the hallway and to ascend and descend the stairs likewise. If we carried that practice into our adult life, perhaps we could all proceed more serenely. — Bernadette, Metro US reader

THE POLITENESS POLICE
I am sick and tired of strangers saying, "You're welcome!" after I walk through a door, having failed to say, "Thank you" for holding it for me. Did that Politeness Policeman notice that I was trying to get through with two youngsters in my hands? Did I blurt out, "THANKS A LOT FOR LENDING A HAND"? No, because I have manners. If you are going to correct someone's manners, just make sure you know their situation first!

Aries Keep an open mind when dealing with peers, friends and family. Engage in talks that will help you better understand how others feel and how to best move forward.

Taurus Personal change will bring you the most satisfaction. You will face some trepidation from those who don't like disruptions, but in the end, praise will come your way.

Gemini Logic and reason will get you back on track. Concentrate on how to make the most of your time and attributes. Pushing to get ahead will discourage the people holding you back.

Cancer Emotional setbacks should be shared with a loved one. Together, you will find a way to overcome any adversity you face. Look for a unique way to deal with opposition.

Leo Ask for help and get things done. Speak up about your plans and listen to suggestions, but don't let an unrealistic idea lead to financial loss. Moderation will save you from disaster.

Virgo A change of pace or visit to an unfamiliar place will spark your imagination. Change is coming and new possibilities are within reach. A physical update will draw compliments.

Libra Take control of your life. Do whatever is necessary to improve your relationships with your peers or family members. Speak up and let others know what you want and expect.

Scorpio Look for an alternative before you give in or give up. Don't let someone's pushiness lead you astray. Love who you are and promote what you have to offer.

Sagittarius Keep busy. Let your accomplishments be your calling card. The more you put into professional goals, the easier it will be to use your skills to advance.

Capricorn Walk away from anyone pushing you to conform or to take part in something you don't feel good about. An unexpected change at home will end up being beneficial.

Aquarius How you handle personal finances, negotiations and your health will count for much. Think matters through and take a practical, safe route to achieve victory.

Pisces The signals you get will be easy to read. If you act on your instincts, you will improve your life. A physical change will boost your confidence.

Jeffrey Wright braves the cold and wolves in 'Hold the Dark'

The actor and director Jeremy Saulnier open up about the Netflix thriller.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
GregoryWakeman@metro.us

Because "Hold the Dark" is set in Alaska and was shot in Alberta, Canada, the snow and freezing temperatures were always going to be a key component.

But, of course, that meant that director Jeremy Saulnier and leading man Jeffrey Wright actually had to go and shoot in those horrifically cold conditions. That way the increasingly disturbing story of wolf expert Russell Core going to a remote village to search for wolves that have kidnapped three children would feel authentic.

"It was certainly a rough shoot. But we welcomed harsh conditions because we wanted to archive them," Saulnier recalls, before admitting that his approach did cause some issues. "My whole aversion to artificially and falsehoods in filmmaking caused a little bit of conflict. Because I wouldn't do green screens."

"I wouldn't take it back into the studio and do it as they do in Hollywood," he adds. "I just wouldn't do that, so I had to fight a few battles. But I had full support on doing a very grounded execution of it."

Then there was the wolves.

"Working with wolves was a huge challenge," admits Saulnier. "They don't behave like they do in the movies, in the nature documentaries. They're skittish, they're being followed from a far."

"But if you want to get them involved in a narrative then they're not going to do what you want. Nor did I want them to," he adds. "Because after I saw how they behaved, it would have felt too contrived if we had done the traditional slow approach of wolves in a semicircle bearing their teeth. That s--t doesn't happen. I found out the hard way."

Saulnier was adamant about not using CGI wolves as "it would obliterate the very delicate balance of the mystical nature and the elevated nature of the movie and the grounded type of realistic way that we wanted to realize."

"We invited all the torture we got in the negative 30 degree Celsius temperature and the harsh conditions," says Saulnier. "And the wolves. We are not complaining, that's what we wanted."

There was another unforeseen issue, though, as Wright admits, the snow in Alberta kept on melting, which would instantly ruin continuity.

"We invited all the torture we got in the -30 degree Celsius temperature and the harsh conditions."
Jeremy Saulnier

"I would say the biggest the challenge was one that was not expected, because it was actually warmer than we hoped. That was the biggest challenge," says Wright. "Coming back on set the following morning and seeing that two feet of snow had melted."

"We wanted it to be bone-chilling cold and we wanted the condensation floating out of the mouth, icicles on the face, the ruddiness of harsh winds in the face, icicles in the beard, bring all of that, bring the snow driving sideways," he adds. "We wanted that character to show up everyday. That character being nature at its best."

"Hold the Dark" is now on Netflix.

Yvonne Orji talks 'Insecure,' 'Night School' and keeping an eye on the prize

We caught up with the actress and comedian before her appearance at this year's Forbes Under 30 Summit.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

The cast of "Insecure" speaks onstage at Television Academy. ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Yvonne Orji has made a name for herself with her breakout role as Molly Carter on the hilarious HBO show "Insecure." But the actress and comedian is striving to become more of a household name: She can be seen starring alongside such comedic heavyweights as Kevin Hart and Tiffany Haddish in the new comedy "Night School."

Born to Nigerian immigrant parents, Yvonne Orji could have taken a much different path: She has a master's degree in public health and was on track to spend her days working in the corporate world. We caught up with Orji to talk about her journey.

You got your master's in public health before pursuing your career as a stand-up and an actress. How were you able to keep your eye on the prize early on?

I've got to just say that it was fate. The only way I could stand up to my very African immigrant parents was to be like "this is a God-given dream." I was like, "I have no idea how I'm going to do it." It looks crazy. I have a lot of debt from student loans and still it was like "this is something I've got to do." It was only because I felt like the force and ammunition was behind me to keep going. Also, I think because of my immigrant upbringing, we were taught to never accept no and to just keep going in the face of adversity. So for me, it was failure is not an option. I don't know what that means. If I fail, then what went wrong and how do you fix that?

It seems like your drive to succeed is pretty similar to your character Molly on "Insecure." Did you see those similarities when you read those first scripts?

Absolutely. One of the breakdowns for the role is that she is able to switch between corporate America and being an "around-the-way-girl." I was like '" know this chick." I know her very well. Because I was in corporate America. I worked for a nonprofit after graduation and then I worked in Liberia. I know what it was like to be driven and also what it was like to be the only brown face in an organization that helped a lot of brown people. So — speaking to Issa's nonprofit "We Got Y'all" and Molly's place in the workplace — you want to get ahead and you want to get to do the things that you aspire to do, but there may be some roadblocks that you can't avoid. She can't avoid being brown. So it's like "how do I show myself as an asset and valuable?" That's something that I've had to do not only in entertainment, but in corporate America.

An issue that Molly faced this season is being able to find her voice at work. How hard was it to let your comedic voice be heard next to Kevin Hart and Tiffany Haddish in Night School?

Here's where Molly and I differ. Molly is like "I need to find my voice at all cost." What Yvonne does is like "Whose voice is supposed to be the loudest voice right now? Let's let that voice be the lead and then find your moments to let your voice be heard in the best way." Sometimes, it's not the voice that's the loudest that gets heard. Maybe the voice that's kind of muted or comes in at a point when the loud voices are out-talking each other. You can come in and be like (in a tiny voice) "Hey guys, I have an idea." For me, in "Night School," it was very much an understanding of I know who the major players are. I know who's vehicle this is. I know what I bring to the table, and in this moment, I don't need to be anything but what I've been brought to the table for. I think Molly is struggling to figure that out. She wants to shine at all cost. Sometimes, just because the light isn't on you, that doesn't mean you're not shining. I think that's what Molly doesn't understand yet and in a way she is sabotaging herself.

How to get a handle on your finances once you've graduated

A new study breaks down how many college grads really know their credit scores.

For some, attending college can be a testing ground for how well you will manage your finances as you enter your adult life. After all, you are now on your own, and it is up to you to keep a budget to make sure that you aren't stranded far from home.

These spending and saving habits you develop will continue after you have graduated. And as a study suggests, there are some real differentiating factors that may go into why certain people are on top of — or neglect — their finances once they enter the real world.

Home and automotive insurance company EverQuote was able to come up with some statistics after surveying recent college graduates.

For instance, the study found that 73% of recent college graduates say they know what their credit score is — but only 25% of recent college graduates do not. This means these graduates are unprepared to make big life decisions, like buying a car or taking the steps to own property.

Furthermore, the study takes a look at what the spending characteristics are of both young Democrats and Republicans who have recently graduated. It found Democrats have more credit cards, with 91% having at least one credit card, compared to 88% of all Republicans.

But while Democrats have more credit cards in their wallets, the study found that 78% of Democrats know their credit score, while only 68% of Republicans know their score.

So why are there such differences between recent graduates, and what can they do to prepare themselves for budgeting once they've earned their degrees?

"New graduates may feel overwhelmed with bills and put savings on the back burner," explains Amy Danise, a senior editor at EverQuote. "But current retirement savings statistics give a glimpse into an alarming future if they don't save. Many people nearing retirement have little or no retirement money. Start contributing to a 401(k) as soon as you have a job with access to one. Take free money from your employer! That would be in the form of a 401(k) match. Also free: getting your credit score. It's important to be armed with knowledge about how lenders see you. A low credit score will cost you in the future when you need a car loan or want a mortgage. You'll get higher loan rates. Even many landlords now want to see a credit history before renting. If you're in the dark about your own credit score, you won't take steps to improve it."

As Danise sees it, the earlier students become familiar with money, the better off they are when dealing with their finances after they've earned their degrees. The study found that the majority of people who had a better understanding of their finances had been given some sort of allowance by their parents growing up. Even if an allowance is small it will still show the importance of keeping a budget and create a habit for these kids.

"We were surprised that family budgets while growing up didn't have a consistent impact on money management," says Danise. "Getting an allowance turned out to have a big impact. But whether a family lived on a tight budget or spent freely didn't seem to influence future skills with finances. Message to parents: Give allowances!"

BET OF THE DAY

While I was all about the Boston Red Sox last week, it looks like the AL East powers have been fading as of late. I usually like to go with the hot team heading into a postseason and right now, it's the Milwaukee Brewers. Christian Yelich, who has made an incredible case for National League MVP honors during the second half of the 2018 season, and the Brew Crew are 18-6 in their last 24 games.

Titans shock Eagles in OT

The Eagles cannot get the job done once again on the road.

JOVAN ALFORD
jovan.alford@metro.us

For a second time this season, the Philadelphia Eagles shot themselves in the foot on the road and lost 26-23 in overtime to the Tennessee Titans. Titans quarterback Marcus Mariota hit wide receiver Corey Davis for the game-winning touchdown with 11 seconds left on the clock.

It was a defensive battle for the majority of the first half until quarterback Carson Wentz found wide receiver Jordan Matthews for a 56-yard touchdown to get the Eagles on the board.

Despite dropping back an astounding 50 times, Wentz had a solid game and was able to get tight end Zach Ertz and Alshon Jeffery involved early and often in the game.

The defense, however, stepped up in holding the Titans' running game to only 70 rushing yards.

But when it mattered the most, they could not get off the field, had missed tackles and costly penalties that ultimately ended up hurting them in overtime.

With the loss, the Eagles are now 2-2 and 0-2 on the road.

Here are three takeaways from Philly's inexcusable and disheartening loss in Nashville, Tenn.

1. SECONDARY BENDS AND FINALLY BREAKS

Through the first three weeks of the regular season, the Eagles' secondary has been under intense scrutiny for their bend-but-don't-break style.

Under the direction of defensive coordinator Jim Schwartz, they play to keep the wide receivers in front of them and not allow them to get behind for big plays.

Last Sunday against the Colts, they did a good job of not allowing the big play and forced Andrew Luck to throw passes before the sticks.

However, this week the Titans took a page out of the Bucs' offensive playbook and attacked the Eagles' secondary immediately.

On their first offensive drive, Mariota got a favorable matchup against cornerback Jalen Mills and made him pay. The Titans would eventually score and take an early 3-0 lead.

This was a continuous theme throughout the game as the Titans completed four 20-plus-yard passing plays against the Eagles. In just one game, they matched their total from the previous three games.

Mariota played exceptionally well, giving the defense fits not only throwing the ball but running it as well.

The former first-round completed 69.7 percent of his passes for 344 yards, two touchdowns and an interception. He also had 46 rushing yards and a touchdown.

In addition to Mariota, the secondary had no answer for Davis, who had nine receptions for 161 yards and Taywan Taylor, who had seven receptions for 77 yards.

The secondary must improve quickly because they have a tough matchup next week at home against quarterback Kirk Cousins and the reeling Minnesota Vikings.

2. OFFENSIVE LINE STRUGGLES TO PROTECT WENTZ

Along with the defensive struggles, the Eagles' offensive line did not do a good enough job of protecting quarterback Carson Wentz. This is the second week in a row that the offensive line allowed Wentz to take numerous hits.

Heading into Sunday's contest, the Eagles' offensive line was ranked 23rd in pass protection with an adjusted sack rate of 7.8 percent, according to Football Outsiders.

What does this mean in the grand scheme of things?

It means that the Eagles are struggling in pass protection and need to improve quickly.

Philly's offensive line allowed the Colts to pick up five sacks last week on Wentz, and against Tennessee they racked up four sacks.

In the fourth quarter, Wentz got strip-sacked on a blown assignment by right tackle Lane Johnson, which put the Titans in scoring position.

There were many times in the game where Johnson and other Eagles players were just standing around looking confused.

Just as I stated with the secondary missing assignments, the offensive line has to do a better job with protection because they are going up against a hungry Vikings defense that is better than both the Titans and Colts.

All in all, the Eagles have a lot of work on their hands if they want to repeat as Super Bowl champs.

3. WENTZ LOOKS SHARP IN SECOND START

Last Sunday, Wentz made his 2018 regular-season debut against the Indianapolis Colts. He was not perfect by any means but showed flashes of what made him a potential NFL MVP candidate before suffering a season-ending knee injury.

With another week of practice and playing time under his belt, Wentz looked better against the Titans. He was slinging the ball up and down the field, completing 66 percent of his passes for 348 yards and two touchdowns.

One of the reasons for Wentz's success on Sunday was the return of Jeffery. The veteran wide receiver missed all of the preseason and the first three games of the season rehabbing from torn rotator cuff surgery.

The combo did not miss a beat against the Titans as Jeffery had eight receptions (nine targets) for 105 Yards and a touchdown.

Having Jeffery back on the field, also allowed Ertz to go to work in the middle of the field, compiling 10 receptions (12 targets) for 112 yards.

The Eagles' offense is a work in progress but took major strides against Tennessee. Hopefully, they will have a healthy Darren Sproles and Corey Clement ready to go next week to help out in the running game.

For Philadelphia to be successful and for Wentz to make it through the season, they cannot have 20 carries between two running backs (Jay Ajayi and Wendell Smallwood). It is not a recipe for long-term success.

PHILLIES COLLAPSE WILL NOT BE FORGOTTEN

sports@metro.us

Their fans probably won't listen. They're still in shock and anger, having watched a Phillies team who led the N.L. East the first week in August at 64-49 stage an epic meltdown the rest of the way, dropping them down to third and below .500.

They'll point to the shoddy defense; inconsistent hitting; systematic breakdown of the starting pitching that sustained them the first four-plus months; the erratic bullpen, which caused the Phillies to lose 10 games where they led after seven innings; and more.

Inside the Phillies' locker room hours before they'd continue playing out the string against the newly crowned N.L. East champion Braves — a series everyone thought would be pivotal until only recently — the scene was surreal. While the music blared and players began to fill boxes with their gear to prepare for the offseason, some tried to make sense of the whole thing.

Rather than let it eat at them all winter, they came to the conclusion the best advice might simply be to look ahead and follow the words of a Disney character.

"You've got to let it go," said Nick Williams, before Aaron Nola hurled another gem and the Phils finally snapped their ugly nine-game losing streak Saturday. "This is a young team that has a lot of talent."

"I believe we're going to be crazy-good. So just let it go. I want to take the positives rather than the negatives from the season. Just think 'I need to get better at this, this and that', he added."

Of course, management won't think that way and sweep it all under the rug. After showing so much promise to see it all unravel as it did — finalized by the disastrous eight-game trip to Atlanta and Colorado, where the Phils were outscored 60-21 — they're left with nagging questions and obvious holes to fill.

Do they try to fill them through free agency — with Manny Machado, Bryce Harper, Josh Donaldson heading the list of hitters, lefthanders Patrick Corbin and Dallas Kuechel and J.A. Happ atop potential starters, and closers Craig Kimbrel, Kelvin Herrera and Cody Allen all on the open market?

Do they go the trade route, offering up players like the enigmatic Odubel Herrera, Cesar Hernandez, Maikel Franco, Aaron Altherr and/or some of their best pitching and hitting prospects?

Or do they essentially stand pat, coming to the conclusion this was an aberration, which they'll all learn from and be better prepared for next time?

That's kind of how manager Gabe Kapler sees it.

"I've been spending a lot of time thinking about it," said Kapler, who's been given assurance from general manager Matt Klentak he'll be back in 2019. "I think, quite simply, we can be better prepared for August and September and being strong through those months."

"The fact that we went through this once in August and September, and a lot of our young, developing players experienced the pressure and the magnitude of the situation means they'll be better equipped to handle it next year," he explained.

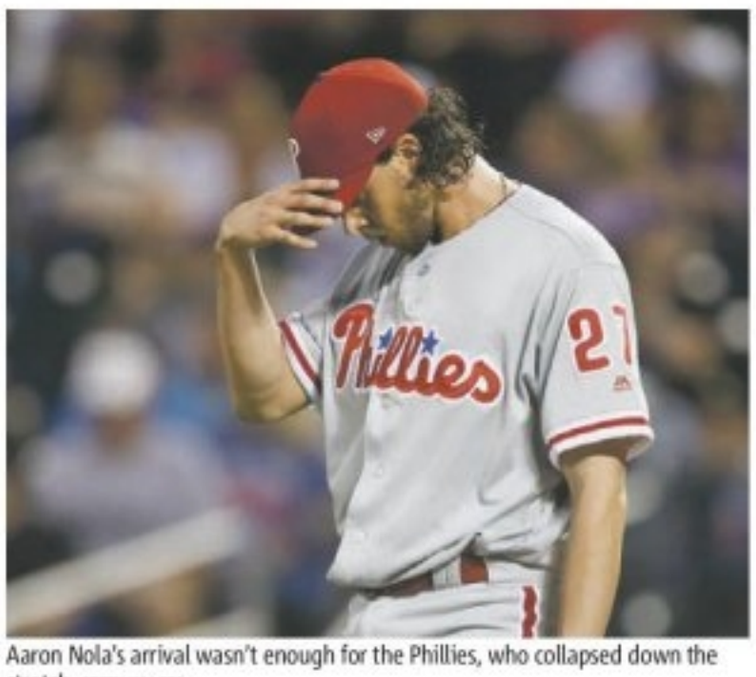
So then how does Kapler evaluate the season, especially considering the way these Phillies rose above all expectations before their epic fall?

"We believed in spring training that we had the talent to be a playoff-caliber baseball team," replied Kapler, whose reliance on analytics, defensive shifts, playing for the big inning and home runs rather than playing small ball frustrated fans.

"We believe that talent is still there. There are some strong positives to take away from the season thus far and there are some things that we know that we have to get better at. So it's a bit of a mixed bag."

That mixed bag has resulted in the Phillies' seventh consecutive losing season — the first time in baseball history a team's gone from 15 games over .500 to under .500 — wiping away much of the good feeling they had generated.

Therefore, it's up to Klentak, Kapler and owner John Middleton to figure out a way to somehow bring that good feeling back.



Aaron Nola's arrival wasn't enough for the Phillies, who collapsed down the stretch. GETTY IMAGES

VICTORY-1
OSTEOARTHRITIS
KNEE PAIN CAN BE DEFEATING
BUT VICTORY CAN BE YOURS.
The VICTORY-1 study is a 52-week clinical trial examining an ultra-purified form of capsaicin - a naturally-occurring compound found in chili peppers - and its potential to provide extended relief from osteoarthritis knee pain with a single local injection. If you are between 40 and 95 years of age, have knee osteoarthritis with moderate to severe pain, and have experienced difficulty managing your knee osteoarthritis pain, you may be eligible to participate. Speak with a member of the staff to learn if the VICTORY-1 study may be an option for you.
